

Arts Chronicle by John Fetter

---

Colorado Springs Gazette Telegraph

Saturday, October 13, 1973

CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY

— It was gratifying to hear the performance of the Colorado Springs Chamber Music Society at CC's Armstrong Hall. Composed mostly of young musicians from NORAD and Air Academy, including also some of their friends, it is a group such as would be difficult to organize even in a big city. These young professional musicians are drawn from all parts of the country. The audience has increased for this group, which has been in existence for two years, and it deserves an even bigger audience. The switch to the college auditorium is a step in the right direction, although some people may still be confused by the official title of Chamber Music Society, which is usually associated with string groups. This group is composed mostly of wind instruments. It was a difficult program, but the training of these young musicians (some not quite so young anymore) is obvious. It is a valuable addition to this community's musical fare.